Research Interests

The Clinton Administration, Trans-Atlantic relations, the Kennedy Administration, Robert Kennedy, the use of historical characters in fiction

Current Research

Dr. Boys is working on a variety of projects at present. These include a major effort to continue his examination of the Clinton years. He has two papers nearing completion on Arresting Assertive Multilateralism and The Theoretical Concept of the Clinton Doctrine. Having completed his PhD thesis on the evolution and execution of foreign policy in the first Clinton Administration (1993-1997), Dr. Boys is in conversation with publishing houses about its potential publication and the likelihood is of a follow up piece examining the foreign policy of the second Clinton Administration (1997-2001). Others plans include a third book examining the Clinton Presidency in Modern American history, considering the administration in contrast to the Bush Presidencies and comparing the styles, policies and personalities involved. Other areas of work include a biography of Clinton's first National Security Adviser, Anthony Lake, who has a breadth of his experience; from wide eyed believer in the New Frontier, through his experience in Vietnam, through his time under Kissinger at the NSC, the wilderness years of the 1970s and 80s and his eventual emergence at the pinnacle of the National Security structure, only to be denied the role of DCI in Clinton's second term. Dr. Boys is also researching material for a political biography of Al Gore, who played a vital role in the development of policy in the last decade of the 20th century and it is fascinating to consider what would have come to pass had the votes in Florida gone the other way. Dr. Boys' PhD research also provides the basis for another series of publications that he is pursuing, including A History of the National Security Strategy Reports, which examine the impact that these reports have had since they were congressionally mandated in 1986, America's Prime Minister? Newt Gingrich in the 1990s, an examination of the Republican Revolution of 1994 and its impact upon the United States, and finally Clash of Wills: Clinton and Gingrich, which examines the two political giants of the decade and the impact that their power struggle had upon America.

Current Research

Book: "At the Edge of Reality: Exploring the Epistemological Adventurism in America's Narrative Traditions." This project posits that American novel production reflects a national tendency to probe and expand cultural, ontological, and even cosmological horizons via the deployment of new epistemological presuppositions and practices--a tradition which many 'canonical' authors used. Extended analysis of 'exemplar' authors (Hawthorne, Twain, Faulkner, Pynchon) provides the foundation of the work.

America Found and Lost - US Foreign Policy Quo Vadis? The Loss of Credibility and its Fall-Out for Global Security – Assessing the Damage from a European, German Perspective. This textbook is a summary of research as European studies scholar and observer of US foreign and security policy since the second half of the 1990s. It covers the pre-Bush, Bush-, post-9/11-Bush and post-Bush-phase; The Country of My Grandparents: An Account of War and Captivity. The book is an auto-biographical family account, partly fictionalized autobiography, based on two World War II diaries and one biography, written by three great-grandfathers of my daughters. Both my grandfathers and one grandfather of my husband were German prisoners of war in US-American POW camps in Germany or the US following WWII. All three survived WWII. One of my grandfathers was among the first (American-trained) journalists in Heidelberg following the issuing of licenses for new newspapers in the American zone of Germany.

Research Interests

My research interests centre upon the mediation of design and philosophies of design to consumers, through advice literature, corporate literature, advertising and magazines. I am particularly concerned with issues of domestic design, domesticity, gender and questioning both the extent to which design can embody national identity and the single-nation perspective. In sum, I research the visual and textual discourses that surround objects.

Current Research

My current work is centred on bringing to fruition outputs from my two major research projects, Designing Domesticity, and Writing Design. See books forthcoming, in the publications list, above.

(Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, forthcoming 2008).

Research Interests

My research interests lie in the field of US Foreign Relations and Diplomacy in the twentieth century with a specific focus on Presidential Foreign Policy, and American visions of peacemaking and post-war planning.

Current Research

I have a number of ongoing research projects reflecting my research interests: A New Vision for International Relations: Explaining the Philosophical Foundations of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Administration's Foreign Policy in Post-War Planning. This is the working title to a major research project to be conducted over the next 2/3 years looking at the Foreign Policy thinking in relation to Post-War planning undertaken during the entirety of the administration and not just during the Second World War. This project will involve considerable primary research; a number of grant applications to institutions in the UK and the US; a series of conference papers; articles in referred journals and in the mid-term a published volume, as well as providing the opportunity to develop new teaching opportunities and supervision of PhD students. International History and International Relations: I have recently signed a contract with Routledge to co-author a volume with the title of "International History and International Relations" alongside Prof. Andrew Williams (St Andrews) and Dr Amelia Hadfield (University of Kent). We will be writing a single volume addressing the value to scholars and students of cross pollinating the disciplines of International Relations and International History. Presidential Peacemaking in the Twentieth and Twenty-first Centuries: in the longer term I plan to focus upon American conceptions of war and peace with particular attention being paid to the field of presidential peacemaking at the end of the First and Second World Wars and at the end of the Cold War. With a view to applying for a large research grant and taking on PhD students as research assistants, this project will allow for collaborative research and teaching in the future.

Current Research

At the moment, I am working on a research project to study Historiographical and critical images of the United States which have circulated in Spain in the 20th and 21st centuries. It will carry out a systematic compilation of published works (including books, collective works and articles in specialized journals), on which to base the elaboration of analytical studies regarding their contribution to the development of Spanish identity and historical consciousness itself, and to that of the contemporary intellectual and cultural relations between Spain and the United States. This subject falls within modern academic definitions of the field of "international relations", which is no longer limited merely to intergovernmental, official, diplomatic or belligerent relations, but also comprehends socioeconomic, demographic, political, ideological, and as a more innovative aspect, the field of cultural relations more generally.
